REFERENCE

Gilroy is a fertile plain, fairly timbered in a parklike manner with oak, sycamore, cottonwood, and willow trees. East and west, mountains curve and almost meet, as if enclosing the valley within their rocky barriers, but even in their narrowest place, the foothills are still a half mile apart; while at the southern end, the Santa Clara merges into the Pajaro valley.

INTRODUCTION

As a rural city with its roots in the early 1800's, Gilroy's architectural fabric represents its rich heritage. Many early structures and entire neighborhoods are still standing today, a proud statement of our forefathers' craftsmanship and sense of style. The Historic Building Study is an attempt to identify, document and evaluate Gilroy's physical resources, individual buildings and entire neighborhoods.

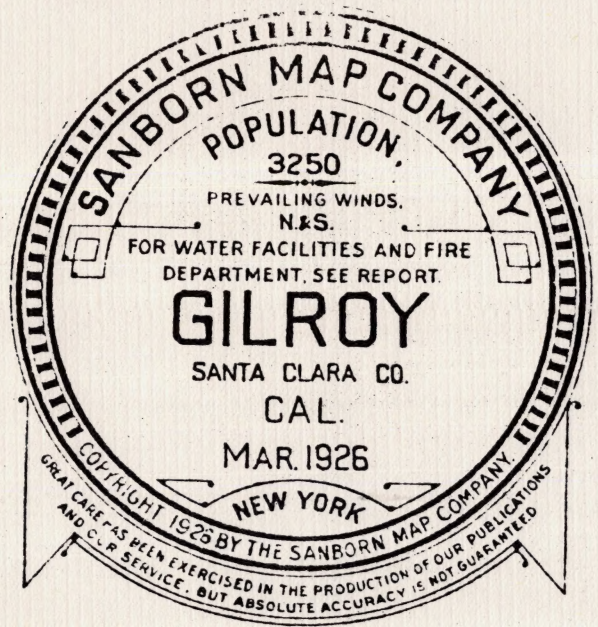
Structures were selected on the basis of historical and cultural value, environmental setting, neighborhood importance and architectural significance. Detailed research was kept to a minimum. There is a need to identify historically significant structures, and to have tangible information available for review in the planning and building approval processes. Documentation of the importance of these structures will allow planners to make firm and appropriate recommendations to the Planning Commission and City Council, enabling Gilroy to take effective measures in preserving its heritage. An historic overlay zone for both neighborhoods and individual sites, with Architectural and Site review of proposed exterior changes, is one of the goals of the study. This idea meshes with the State's model historic ordinance. State certification of this addition to the zoning ordinance will allow economic and tax benefits to owners of designated historic buildings. By evaluating the successful aspects of existing buildings and neighborhoods, valuable lessons in relative form, mass and scale can be learned. Relearning what our forefathers knew so well will also help to make the design review process easier by bringing home the idea of compatible building design.

chapter 1
THE HISTORIC BUILDING SURVEY

THE SURVEY
Taking Stock

An inventory of available information was first on our list of things to do. The Gilroy Museum was a prime source. City directories, local biographies, tax assessment roll books, and old photos and newspapers are on file there. We sent away for other city's historical building surveys and have collected a modest library. We attended conferences and workshops and compared notes with other local, state and national officials.

The most important source we found of specific Gilroy information are sets of old fire insurance maps. The Sanborn Fire Insurance Company mapped existing buildings in Gilroy within certain boundaries in 1886, 1892, 1906 and 1926. The maps show building perimeters, type of building material, number of stories, water sources and store names and types of merchandise. By comparing the 1926 maps with earlier maps, approximate construction dates were discovered for many buildings.



Street Walking

With the 1926 Sanborn maps in our hands, we took to the streets. The 1876 Gilroy City limits, essentially the original "quad", defined our study area. Existing buildings were checked against buildings shown on the 1926 maps. In these field checks, we observed the extent of alterations and general condition of existing buildings, along with noting buildings that have been replaced, moved or demolished. We attempted to talk to all homeowners and business people in hopes of learning more information on the building's past. Not everyone was at home or available, but those we did contact were interested and helpful.

We mapped the remaining structures built before 1926, about 600 buildings in all. The city outside of the old quad was covered by windshield survey.

The State Forms

A list of the existing buildings was compiled, noting their approximate construction dates, building style and any background information available. We began to fill out the State Historic Resource forms on each of these buildings. The forms helped us to organize our information and allowed us to set up a complete file on the buildings we studied. Photographs were taken of the buildings and attached to the appropriate form.

The Criteria

With approximately 900 older buildings found within the Gilroy city limits and on our list and in our files, it was obvious not all the buildings were significant ones. Next came the job of sifting and whittling the historically important buildings from the not-so-important. Three categories of criteria were checked as we reviewed the buildings in field check after field check. We looked to see if the buildings were significant historically, culturally, architecturally or due tothe neighborhood setting.

1. Historical and Cultural Significance

Does the building represent a distinct historical period, type, style, region, or way of life?

Is it an example of a type of building once common but now rare?

Is the building connected with someone who was famous, important, or a local personality?

Is the architect or builder famous or well-recognized?

2. Architectural Significance

Are the construction materials used in an unusual, significant or effective manner or style?

Is the style of the building unusual for Gilroy, for California?

Does the building contain original materials or workmanship that can be valued in themselves?

Is the building especially well-preserved?

DESCRIPTION

7a. Architectural style: Queen Anne

7b. Briefly describe the present physical description of the site or structure and describe any major alterations from original condition:

This award-winning, completely restored Queen Anne is a two story house with an offset gable roofline and clapboard siding. The large gable on the second floor serves as a porch with a sculptured surface, round columns, shingled square columns, carved balusters and topped with a weather vane. The enclosed eaves have a decorated frieze around the turret on the northeast corner of the building. There is a bay window beneath a small balustered balcony on the east face and italianate brackets under the cornice on the porch. The open recessed porch is supported by round columns and has a railing of carved balusters. The neat detailing and solid craftsmanship of this former "lost cause" is beautifully highlighted by the soft purple with white trim paint job.

3. Neighborhood Setting

Is the building an important element in the character of the neighborhood, either alone or with similar buildings in the area?

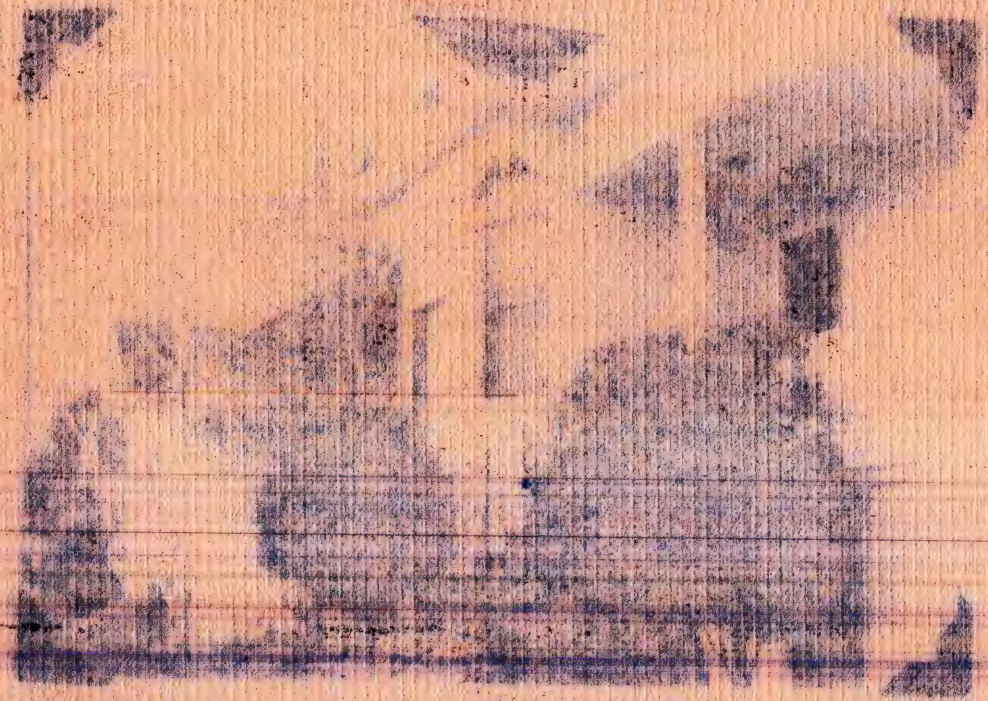
Is the building well-related to its site or to existing buildings?

Using this criteria, the list of important buildings shrank to approximately 300. Neighborhoods and individual sites were mapped. The most significant buildings within a neighborhood were named, however all the buildings found in a historic neighborhood are important as contributing elements to the neighborhood's character.

The End Product

We now have a complete alphabetized list of important structures in Gilroy. We have preliminary information on file for 900 older buildings in town. This information will help us in reviewing applications for development. Along the way we've collected a modest library that is available to the public. Knowledge of preservation tax benefits and available funding for preservation efforts allows us to serve the public better.

chapter 2



NEIGHBORHOODS

contain a concentration of historic buildings. Not all buildings in a neighborhood are significant by themselves, although collectively they add to the character of a historically important street scene. The named buildings are the most significant ones in the neighborhood.
